Middle and elementary teachers speak out

The biggest challenge that teachers in middle and elementary schools face is the district’s change in the daily schedule. An electronic survey of teachers conducted by CEA last March revealed that the schedule change has meant less collaborative team planning time, more discipline issues, greater student and teacher stress and more student failure.

Elementary classrooms are more crowded, and teachers have less time to teach in an engaging, creative way, since they are too busy giving tests.

Here are some particulars of the survey:

MIDDLE SCHOOL
- Ninety-three percent of FRs responded that students are arriving at their buildings before 7:45 a.m., some as early as 7 a.m. Yet only half of FRs indicated that these students were being properly supervised.
- Common planning time is being used for everything except planning. Teachers are being pulled into an alphabet soup of meetings during this time including for IAT, SAIL and IEPs, in addition to team and content area meetings.
- Three quarters of teachers surveyed said parent-teacher conferences were being scheduled for them without advance notice. Some of these meetings have disrupted teaching time.
- There are fewer tutoring opportunities this year, and those presented usually are over a teacher’s lunch break.
- Academic teams are less effective than last year. The major reason is that the eight-period day has hurt their ability to coordinate student assignments. One of the results is too much homework, since assignments are being made without group consultation.
- Sixth grade students are overwhelmed and more are falling this year.
- The eight-period day causes other problems:
  - Because of scheduling priorities, several math teachers report being more than two months behind in the curriculum.
  - Special education teachers reported that more students are being kept in resource rooms because class sizes have grown. This could constitute a potential violation of students’ IEPs.
  - ESL teachers noted that their students were being assigned to foreign language classes—something for which most are not prepared.

Student class schedules:
- Eighth graders now take health, physical education and computer for high school credit. As a result, these courses are not available for sixth- and seventh-graders who may want to take them.
- Physical education classes are packed, and so are the school gyms. At all multiple schools, students are forced to sit in the cafeteria or auditorium if bad weather moves recess inside.

ELEMENTARY SCHOOL
- Health textbooks are written for 10th-graders, a reading level too high for many eighth-graders; and the books contain some age-inappropriate material.
- Discipline is also a problem. Students are tardy. And when they misbehave, there are fewer options for dealing with them.
- Without the PEAK program, other options are being tried, including after-school detention, Saturday school and a timeout room. But most of the teachers surveyed said these strategies aren’t working.
- Half of the teachers responded that their 190s were not being dealt with in a timely manner.

Staff assaults, threats and other building safety concerns have increased.
- Four of every five FRs surveyed indicated one or more teachers in their buildings has been assaulted by a student this year.
- They noted that middle school administrators are the best in the district at handling assaults on teachers properly, but middle school students still receive expulsions at a lower rate than high school students.

As for discipline:
- Three-quarters of teachers surveyed said principals were responding in a timely manner to 190s. But more than half of those surveyed said their principals were responding ineffectively to daily discipline issues.
- Since students may not report to PEAK during core instruction, there are few options. So disruptive students remain in the classroom.
- Many problems result from a lack of administrative support at the district level. Executives in the central office are not supporting principals’ decisions.

Your association has voiced the concerns expressed by middle school and elementary school teachers to the administration. CEA will continue to speak out against poorly thought-out decisions and policies that make it more difficult for students to learn and for our professionals to do their jobs. Urban homestead zone vouchers target “Big Eight” public schools

Urge your State Representative to oppose House Bill 26 (R-Wolpert): Urban Homestead Zone Vouchers.

In an effort to increase the population in Ohio’s urban centers, House Bill 26 seeks to expand voucher eligibility in the “Big Eight” urban school districts (Akron, Canton, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Columbus, Dayton, Toledo and Youngstown). The bill authorizes cities with declining populations to create “urban homestead zones.” If such a zone is in a “Big Eight” city and a residence and/or preceding owner spends at least $120,000 on residential improvements/construction, the resident’s children will be eligible for vouchers.

Take action to support public schools!

Returning from medical leave? Take note…

Need to take some extended medical leave? Our negotiated agreement provides some very specific procedures.

One of the most important aspects is the need to see the school board’s physician for clearance and to submit the “intent-to-return-to-work” documents at least three days in advance of your return. Many association members have attempted to come back to the classroom without doing so or after submitting the paperwork late.

When seeing the board’s doctor, please note: Your permission paperwork must state that you can return with “no restrictions.” Also employees may not return to their duties any sooner than the date of return specified.

The board physician’s hours, location and contact information are provided in the leave packet.

If you have taken leave to care for a family member, a physician release is not required. But you still must submit advance paperwork stating your intended return date.

For clarification, please see Chapter 700 of the Master Agreement. Or call the CPS Human Resources Department at 365-8307. We at the CEA office also are glad to help you understand these provisions.

West HS staff goes above and beyond

Teachers today shoulder many responsibilities. We must, at all times, be educators, but we also assume the roles of parents, mentors, healthcare providers, arbitrators, protectors and friends. We accept these responsibilities, knowing that all of these roles come under the title of being a teacher.

This became apparent at West HS, Thursday evening, April 26. During the annual Cultural Night, several outsiders, whose intentions were to disrupt the program and create a disturbance, rushed the stage and a near melee ensued in the back parking lot. Along with principal Arnold Holmes, Officer Brent Snyder and Safety and Security Officer Willie Campbell, four West HS teachers attempted to disperse the crowd until sufficient police could be summoned. These four teachers instinctively protected West HS’s family, students, parents and teachers alike.

CEA would like to commend these teachers who went above and beyond the call of duty. Ben Scott, Jeff Branson, Bob Bartels and Paul Whitehill proved that they are truly educators, in every sense of the word.
