What is JANUS?
As Prepared by OEA

Janus v. AFSCME is a politically motivated attack to use the U.S. Supreme Court to divide and conquer our union by eliminating fair share fee. The question being considered by the Court in the case is simple: Is it a violation of the First Amendment to require that public-sector workers covered by a collective bargaining agreement pay a fair share fee? If the Court finds in favor of Mr. Janus, it will immediately become illegal to collect fair share fees, fees that are collected from individuals who receive the benefits of the union but choose not to be members. However, all other provisions of the collective bargaining agreement will remain intact.

Will the Janus decision invalidate our collective bargaining agreement? No. If the Supreme Court finds in favor of Janus, the decision will only invalidate provisions that have been bargained regarding fair share fees. Will we need to reopen negotiations immediately following the Janus decision? Maybe. If your local's contract has a fair share fee provision, consult with your Labor Relations Consultant to determine what, if any, requirements to negotiate exist. If the local's contract does not contain a fair share fee provision, there will not be a need to reopen negotiations.

Will the Janus decision potentially change the way in which we collect dues? No, other than no longer collecting fees from fair share fee payers. Contract provisions related to the collection of regular membership dues, including payroll deduction, will remain unchanged.

Will we be required to have members re-sign membership cards? No. The membership process that currently exists in the local, including continuous membership, will remain in place following the Janus decision.

Can members choose to drop their membership immediately following the Janus decision? Maybe, but membership is a year-long dues commitment. Members sign a membership agreement with the local/OEA/NEA and are obligated to fulfill those terms. Moving forward, local associations will continue to conduct the annual membership drive and will have to have a window of time during which members will have the ability to opt out of membership without an ongoing financial obligation.

Will we still be required to provide representation to people who are covered by the contract but decide to drop their membership? Yes. The law continues to require us to uphold the provisions of our collective bargaining agreement on behalf of everyone who is covered by the agreement. Therefore, we will still be required to provide basic representation to non-members, including the filing and processing of grievances; however, non-members will lose their voice at the local level. They will be unable to run for office and vote on contract ratifications, their officer elections, and elections for colleagues who will serve as representatives at the state or national level. Non-members will also lose other benefits of membership including access to the Attorney Referral Program, NEA Liability Insurance, discounts, etc.

What will be the impact if members elect to drop membership? While non-members will lose the many individual benefits provided by OEA and NEA, the most significant impact is the loss of power at the local bargaining table. When our associations have fewer members, our ability to negotiate fair compensation packages and improved working and student learning conditions will diminish. Additionally, our influence with our state legislators could weaken with regard to statewide issues impacting public education like OTES, RESA, and school funding.

If members opt-out, shouldn’t we attempt to change the law so that we can exclude them from representation rights? No. We represent public education employees, and we are the strongest, most well-suited collective voice for public education. To exclude non-members would be a knee-jerk reaction to the “divide-and-conquer” strategy that opponents of unions pursue to weaken our collective power. Our local does not have fair share fee; will my local be impacted? Maybe. Any reduction in the number of members statewide could impact OEA's ability to support locals. We also expect non-fair share fee locals to be targeted by campaigns to encourage members to drop membership.

What can we expect from anti-union groups following the Janus decision? Based on experiences in other states, we fully expect to see a well-funded and organized push to contact members and encourage them to drop their membership. Such efforts are likely to be aggressive, using a variety of contact methods, to deceive education employees that they can receive all the benefits of representation without having to pay dues. Organized by a web of wealthy, anti-public education interests, this campaign has a singular objective—to weaken unions and diminish the collective voice of education employees.

What can we do to combat this attack from organized anti-union groups? It is up to us to reinforce our belief that public education needs a collective voice led by the professionals tasked with working with Ohio's children. OEA and our locals provide the support & relationships, influence & power, and protection & advocacy necessary to sustain a strong public education system. Locals can utilize one-on-one conversations and small group meetings as a means to communicate accurate information to our members and the public regarding the value of public education. OEA Labor Relations Consultants are working with locals to support member engagement.

Evaluation Appeals

Do you have questions about your OTES evaluation? Do you believe an error was made? Are you in disagreement with the final summative rating? Are there any dates in question? If you have concerns regarding your evaluation and desire to appeal it, there is a process you must follow. The Joint Evaluation Panel has approved an Appeals Process for the following:

- Educators that have an overall Final Summative Rating of "Ineffective"
- Educators that have an "Ineffective" performance rating
- Two evaluators and the overall rating is questionable
- The evaluation contains a procedural error

The Evaluation Appeal Form is available on the ILEAD website. To file an appeal, submit the completed form, along with appropriate documentation to: Teri Mullins at CEA no later than 4:30 p.m., Friday, May 25. Your Association strongly recommends hand-delivering this extremely important paperwork. The Joint Evaluation Panel will review appeals the first week after school ends. Educators and evaluators will both be notified of the appeal outcome.
